

TEXAS WOMAN'S UNIVERSITY
Promotion and Tenure Criteria
Department of English, Speech, and Foreign Languages
Criteria for Foreign Languages Faculty

The Department of English, Speech, and Foreign Languages offers course work in four academic areas: English, Foreign Languages, Rhetoric, and Speech. Courses in Foreign Languages and Speech are at the undergraduate level. There is no degree program in Foreign Languages or Speech at this time. Faculty members teaching in the areas of Foreign Languages and Speech offer courses in support of degree programs outside their discipline, and have a separate set of promotion and tenure standards. Faculty in English and Rhetoric teach at the undergraduate, master's, and doctoral levels in the Department's BA, MA, MAT, and PhD programs. The faculty members in English, Foreign Languages, and Speech provide courses in support of many degrees across the University. The Department also offers minors for students majoring in other disciplines. The Department of ESFL offers courses from the developmental to the doctoral levels.

In considering faculty members in ESFL for promotion, peer reviewers and administrators at the various levels of review must note carefully the teaching assignments of each individual as well as the record in scholarship and service. All reviewers should also note the workloads of applicants for promotion in making recommendations.

Collegiality is demonstrated by ability to share ideas, to work cooperatively, and to participate in shared decision making with faculty in departmental meetings and committees, committee members on student advising and research committees, and other faculty. It also includes providing other faculty with professional support to carry out their work and developing professionally. Collegiality means professional cooperation with colleagues, rather than homogeneity of opinion that could interfere with academic freedom. Whenever the word "collegiality," or its cognates, appears below, the above definition will apply.
